AMERICA 250
THE GOLDEN HILL RIOT – JANUARY 19, 1770
 By Kevin Shurte

Just as the battles of Lexington and Concord marked the opening shots of the American Revolution, so too did the Golden Hill Riot mark its first bloodshed. The Golden Hill Riot, commonly referred to as the Battle of Golden Hill, was one of the earliest clashes arising between American patriots and British regulars.

Following the conclusion of the French and Indian War in 1763, the British government opted to keep a standing army in North America to maintain control over their newly conquered land holdings in Florida and Canada, as well as to suppress possible Indian uprisings. As part of this peacetime force, 1,500 British soldiers arrived in New York City in 1766. In accordance with the parliamentary Quartering Act of 1765, colonial legislatures were responsible for providing barracks or public housing accommodations for all British troops. However, the New York Assembly refused to levy taxes to comply with this dictate, thus many of the newly arrived soldiers had no quarters in the existing city barracks and had to billet aboard their ships.

Adding insult to injury, the New York Sons of Liberty, formed in 1765 by John Lamb, Alexander McDougall, and Isaac Sears in response to Parliament's passage of the Stamp Act, had erected a series of 4 liberty poles to date on the Common outside Montagne's Tavern near the corners of Murrays Street and Broad Way, one block south of the British barracks. British soldiers had felled the first three liberty poles constructed of wood, so the patriots cast the lower portion of the fourth pole in iron. From 1767 to 1770, British soldiers made several unsuccessful attempts to destroy this hardened target by means of cutting and digging. Finally, on the night of January 13, 1770, redcoats attempted to explode the liberty pole with gunpowder. However, patrons of Montagne's Tavern discovered the saboteurs and began heckling them. Reacting to this verbal harassment, the soldiers drew their swords, fixed their bayonets, and stormed and vandalized the premises. This ransacking sparked civil unrest in NYC over the next week.

On January 15, an anonymous broadside published under the pseudonym "Brutus" appeared on the streets. This appeal asserted that British soldiers were not present to protect but to enslave the citizen population. It directed those who sought to learn more and further the Cause to meet at the liberty pole at noon on January 17. However, the night before the meeting was to take place, British soldiers crept out in darkness and succeeded in downing the symbol of resistance, exploding its iron base, chopping its wooden pole, and spitefully littering its debris at the doorway of Montagne's Tavern.

The next day 2,000-3,000 patriots answered the broadside's call and gathered at the Common where they discussed their outrage over the billeting of soldiers and resolved to treat "any soldier who behaved in an insulting manner" as an enemy of the peace (Bacelar). The British 16th Regiment of Foot responded with their own missive titled "God and a Soldier" which claimed responsibility for the destruction of the liberty pole, labeled the Sons of Liberty as the true enemies of peace, and ridiculed them for clinging to a piece of wood for their freedom.

Hostilities finally boiled over in Manhattan on January 19, 1770. The conflict started with patriots Isaac Sears and Walter Quackenbush attempting to prevent soldiers posting their "God and a Soldier" leaflets. The incident began to escalate as additional soldiers arrived with fixed bayonets. Attempting to pacify the situation, NYC mayor Whitehead Hicks ordered the soldiers to return to their barracks. Armed with knives, clubs, and a halberd, the crowd followed until encountering British reinforcements on Golden Hill. Here the regulars drew their weapons and taunted the crowd, "Where are your Sons of Liberty now?" (New York Historical Society). Consequently, a brawl soon erupted, and a riot spread throughout the neighborhood.

While no deaths occurred, combatants on both sides suffered beatings and stabbings in addition to injuries inflicted on unarmed, uninvolved citizens. Golden Hill Riot marks the first incident of open aggression between American colonists and British soldiers and the first instance of blood spilt relative to the coming war. Just six weeks later, British troops would fire upon another group of colonists in another city killing five in what has come to be known as the Boston Massacre.

On December 16, 2023, at the annual Wreaths Across America Ceremony held in Broward County, fourteen Chapter Compatriots and friends gathered at Forest Lawn North Memorial Gardens to remember and honor our veterans, both past and present.

SAR MEMBER PROFILE – BLAIR A. COLLINS
INTERVIEWED BY CHUCK ADAMS

Q. Ok Blair, can you tell us a little bit about yourself?

A. I was born in Washington D.C. in 1954. I grew up in suburban Springfield, Virginia, and attended Annandale High School. I went to college at Virginia Tech, in Blacksburg, Virginia, and I graduated with a BS degree in Microbiology in 1977. Go Hokies!!

Q. Can you tell us about your career and whether or not you are retired?

A. After graduating, I worked at a local small laboratory in Northern Virginia that focused on government contracts. I moved to South Florida in 1982. Over my career, I had positions in pharmaceutical and clinical research, primarily as Project Manager/Director. I co-founded a medical marketing company, Interact Communications, which my partner and I ran for about 10 years. I have been fully retired now since about 2017.

Q. Can you tell us about some of your recreational interests?

A. Baseball, golf and tennis have always been my favorite participation sports. From a fan perspective, I enjoy all mentioned as well as football and soccer. My wife and I like to walk (mostly with our dog Chester), cycle, travel and attend regular exercise classes at the YMCA. I particularly like to root for our South Florida teams – Marlins, Dolphins and Panthers.

Q. How about your family?

A. I have been married to the love of my life and best friend, Valerie, now for 41 years. After getting married in 1982, we relocated to South Florida and have become “native” Floridians (transplants) ever since. Our son Ryan is 35 years old and works for Publix. Our daughter Shannon sadly passed away at the age of 19 from diabetes complications. We support our local horse and ferret rescues as well as the Humane Society and Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals (SPCA). Nationally, we support the Juvenile Diabetes Research Foundation (JDRF) and St. Jude’s Children’s Hospital.

Q. Who is your Patriot ancestor?

A. My patriot ancestor was Captain David Dickson (Dixon) of South Carolina. He commanded a company in 1776 under Brigadier General Williamson. In 1777 he brought a company of Minute Men to Georgia and was stationed on the Frontier. In 1778 his company served in the Artillery during the third failed invasion of East Florida attempting to capture St. Augustine.

Thanks, Blair, for sharing.
